

Regarding the May 5th Transportation rule requiring CDL drivers with hazmat endorsements to have an FBI back ground check. It is my understanding that the government will notify the driver and the state of the outcome of each drivers investigation. For employers who employ CDL drivers with Hazmat endorsement, how will the employer be notified if a driver loses his/her Hazmat endorsement? It is my understanding there are no provisions to notify the employer. In this event, especially with regards to the initial investigation, an employee whose Hazmat endorsement has been removed could continue to drive if he did not inform the employer. The employer would have no clue that the employee was driving illegally.

Is there a provision, somewhere, that notifies the employer if a driver loses the Hazmat endorsement?